

Abductions of Zimbabweans cause concern
By: Haru Mutata- Al Jazeera

South African judge says government must investigate alleged crimes against humanity in neighboring country.

Last Modified: 05 Jun 2012

In recent years, many Zimbabweans have been abducted from South Africa and sent back to their country.

Those abductions, according to some, indicate clear co-operation between the South African secret services and the Zimbabwean government, trying to catch those who tried to overthrow Robert Mugabe from power back in 2007.

A high court judge in South Africa has given hope to some Zimbabweans, when he ruled that, under international law, South Africa were obliged to investigate crimes against humanity committed by officials in Zimbabwe.